

Marieke Beck is the Department of Labor and Industry's Human Rights Bureau, Bureau Chief. She attended undergraduate school at the University of Oregon, followed by law school at the University of Montana. She then clerked with Montana's Supreme Court for the Honorable Justice William E. Hunt. Before coming over to the Department, she worked for several years with a civil rights organization for persons with disabilities. She's been working with the Human Rights Bureau – in some capacity - for almost 15 years. She unabashedly in love with Montana's Human Rights Act and is equally fond of the Governmental Code of Fair Practices. She's a fourth generation Montanan married to a devilishly handsome Minnesotan with two preternaturally beautiful children.